

Special Issue Workshop Programme

“Firm-centred, multi-level approaches to overcoming semi-peripheral constraints”

Date & place

Monday, 20 March 2023, 9am – 6pm

Trafalgar Room, Arundel House, 6 Temple Place, London, WC2R 2PG

Workshop organisers

Kira Gartzou-Katsouyanni (European Institute, LSE)

Sonja Avlijaš (University of Belgrade - Faculty of Economics and Business)

Event summary

The workshop will contribute to a Special Issue of Studies in Comparative International Development (SCID) on “Firm-centred, multi-level approaches to overcoming semi-peripheral constraints”. The event is organised in the framework of Kira Gartzou-Katsouyanni’s ESRC Postdoctoral Fellowship and it builds on earlier work at a workshop hosted by Sonja Avlijaš’ Marie Skłodowska-Curie SEEGROW project at the University of Belgrade on 20 May 2022, as well as on panel discussions during the 2021 and 2022 annual conferences of the Society for the Advancement of Socio-Economics (SASE). The Special Issue is due to appear in SCID during the first half of 2024.

The topic

Firms in semi-peripheral areas, which do not belong to the global core or to the periphery in terms of their production and trade profiles, can be important developmental agents as they seek creative ways to avoid being trapped by both market and government failures. Shifting to more innovative, higher value-added segments of the global market is challenging in semi-peripheral contexts characterized by low trust, social fragmentation, and path dependencies of old development models. Firms outside the core are also limited at the international level, by regulatory and financial constraints and by the dominant role of large multinational companies in the global value chains governing the production of a range of sophisticated goods.

Scholars are increasingly advocating a strong, activist developmental state as a way of overcoming those internal and external constraints that domestic firms face. These solutions, however, often fail to acknowledge that government failure is as common in semi-peripheral areas as market failure. It is unlikely that public authorities in the semi-periphery can successfully play the developmental role often requested of them in the literature. Doing so would require them to act as a deus ex machina for economic development, whereas in reality, they often have weak political capacity to improve existing institutions or build new ones. This weakness reflects the fragmentation of potential support coalitions, limitations in resources, as well as problems of capture by rent-seeking groups.

This workshop focuses on empirical cases where domestic firms engage with these multiple constraining features of the semi-periphery and develop strategies to overcome them. Under which conditions have local economic actors been able to carve out opportunities for developing innovative capabilities despite the developmental constraints associated with semi-peripherality? Which macro-level policies have facilitated their endeavours, and what kinds of coalitions succeed in promoting them at the national and international levels, despite adverse circumstances? By focusing on these puzzles in concrete empirical settings, the goal of the workshop is to examine dynamic pro-developmental strategies that allow firms to overcome obstacles and capitalize on opportunities observed in semi-peripheral contexts. In pursuing this goal, the workshop will encourage a process of non-hegemonic knowledge exchange about development agency in different areas of the world, cutting across the traditional global North and South divide in the political economy and international development literatures.
